

Ukraine places USD 2bn Eurobonds

Hryvnia retail deposits decline. MoF accumulated large liquidity surplus. FX reserves unchanged on government borrowings

Hryvnia liquidity drains further

August 17 is the deadline for companies to make their quarterly tax payments. For banks, this means a decline in their hryvnia liquidity and the MoF seeing their highest levels of excess liquidity for the full year. It has now become customary for overnight rates to hit above 20%, while the 1M rate is stable at 24%. Banks are struggling to attract hryvnia deposits, as the population expects the hryvnia to devalue. In July, hryvnia retail deposits declined by 0.4% m/m, while those denominated in foreign currency grew by 2.1% m/m. During the coming months, we may well see intensifying outflows of hryvnia deposits and increasing demand for foreign currency. This will be a double hit for banks and interest rates will rise further.

Ukraine placed USD 2bn Eurobonds

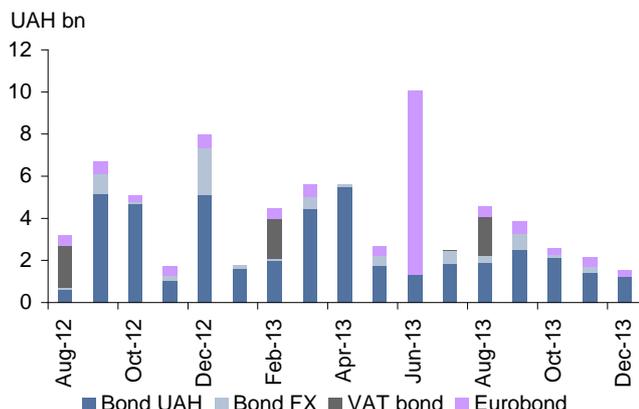

Ukraine returned to external market borrowings

On July 18, the MoF managed to place USD 2bn in 5Y Eurobonds at 9.25%. Considering that Spain placed Eurobonds at 7%, the yield on Ukrainian securities does not seem high. Last year, in June, Ukraine placed the same tenor bonds at 6.25%. Higher yields are due to the intensifying EU debt crisis. The demand for bonds was surprisingly very high, topping USD 6bn. The absence of the IMF program did not scare off investors. The government will still have to intensify its borrowing on the domestic market to fulfill its plans for the year. As for August, the MoF does not intend to borrow more funds than it needs for debt service. According to the August schedule of primary bonds placements, the MoF will only issue 5Y and 7Y bonds, which find only interest among state-owned banks. Seasonally, the state budget has a greater need for funds from September on. By the end of autumn, we may well see the introduction of bonds with much shorter maturities, maybe even less than 1Y.

FX reserves unchanged on government borrowing

Hryvnia continues to weaken

International reserves of Ukraine increased in July by 2.6%, to USD 30bn. The increase in reserves was mainly due to the receipt of funds by the government from the placing of 5Y Eurobonds amounting to USD 2bn. From now on, demand for foreign currency will gradually rise, as the population is getting more edgy on possible hryvnia devaluation. The hryvnia's current peg to the USD is likely to be tested hard in the period from September to November. Independent of whether the NBU will be able to keep the hryvnia stable, FX reserves will drain significantly on the back of rising FX demand.
